

NOTES ON THE CONTRIBUTORS

Dr. G.J. Bryant is a history lecturer at Bolton Institute of Higher Education, where he teaches modern and imperial history. He has published on the British Indian Army in the eighteenth century.

Michael Jones founded THE NETWORK, a dramatic and cultural group resident at Merseyside Trade Union Community and Unemployed Resource Centre, while completing a degree in History and Politics at Liverpool University.

William King is a graduate of the University of Leicester BA (1971) and Ph.D (1979). Since 1972 he has taught in further education and is now Vice-Principal of Monkwearmouth College, Sunderland.

Kevin Moore from Nantwich, Cheshire, was an undergraduate and a postgraduate student in the History Department at Liverpool University. He is currently employed on the Docklands History Project at that university.

Geoffrey Place read modern history at Oxford University. He teaches at Parkgate, is chairman of the Parkgate Society, and a past chairman (now secretary) of the Burton and South Wirral Local History Society.

Eunice and Maurice Schofield are retired history teachers, now specialising in Lancashire local history. Maurice has for many years worked on colonial shipping from the north-west ports in the eighteenth century, recently under the auspices of the Department of Economic History at Liverpool University on the Liverpool Plantation Registers. Eunice has worked as his research assistant, as well as following her own interests in social history c.1900. This is their first joint paper.

Nigel Temple is a practising painter, N.D.D., A.T.D., and Royal West of England Academician. He has an M.Litt and a Ph.D. in architecture, and his current research is into Victorian childrens' books, architectural pattern books, and gardens and buildings in Europe.

John Tully was born and educated in Widnes, Cheshire, before taking law degrees at Liverpool Polytechnic and Birmingham University. He qualified as a solicitor in 1977 and is currently employed by Halton Borough Council.

D.J. Wilkinson was educated at Royal Grammar School, Lancaster, and Keble College Oxford, where he did his postgraduate research into Lancashire justices of the peace. He has taught history in the independent school sector since 1979.

