

NOTES ON THE CONTRIBUTORS

Andrew Breeze is an F.R.Hist.S. and F.S.A. He has written many papers on philology, as well as the controversial study Medieval Welsh literature (Dublin: Four Courts Press, 1997).

Sam Davies took a degree in Economic and Social History at Bristol University. After research at Sheffield University, he received his doctorate from Liverpool John Moores University, and is now Reader in Labour History there. He is the author of Liverpool Labour: social and political influences on the development of the Labour Party in Liverpool, 1900–1939 (1996), and co-author (with Bob Morley) of County borough elections in England and Wales, 1919–1938: a comparative analysis (8 vols, 1999 and forthcoming).

G. H. H. Glasgow was educated at Merchant Taylors School, Crosby, and Emmanuel College, Cambridge. He graduated in 1948, obtaining the degrees of M.A. and LL.M. Subsequently he qualified as a solicitor. He retired in 1998 as H.M. Coroner for the County of Merseyside (the districts of Sefton, Knowsley, and St Helens). He is at present researching the role of Lancashire coroners c. 1800–1888.

John Hassan has written many publications on the water and energy industries, including A history of water in modern England and Wales (1998).

Alison Maddock graduated from Cambridge University in 1969 with a degree in natural sciences and anthropology. She took a postgraduate qualification in museum studies and became a museum curator in Norfolk, later working in the visitor services department of Croxteth Hall, Liverpool. The material in her paper derives from her dissertation for Liverpool University's Diploma in Local History, gained in 1995. She now lives in Wiltshire.

C. B. Phillips is a past president of this Society. He is Senior Lecturer in Social and Economic History at Manchester University, and has published widely on the early-modern period.

Robert Philpott is curator of Roman and later archaeology at Liverpool Museum. His research interests include later prehistoric and Romano-British rural settlement in the north-west.

David Shotter is Senior Lecturer in Roman History at Lancaster University. He has published widely in the fields of Roman imperial history, Romano-British archaeology, and Roman numismatics, including his recent The Roman frontier in Britain (1996).

Peter Taylor has published several works on popular protest, such as Popular protest in early industrial Britain: Bolton, 1825-1850 (1995).
