

NOTES ON THE CONTRIBUTORS

Andrew Breeze is an F.R.Hist.S. and F.S.A. He has written many papers on philology, as well as the controversial study Medieval Welsh literature (Dublin: Four Courts Press, 1997) and, with Professor Richard Coates of Sussex University, Celtic voices, English places: studies of the Celtic impact on place-names in England (Stamford: Shaun Tyas, 2000).

Ryan Dye is Assistant Professor of History at St Ambrose University, Davenport, Iowa. His doctoral dissertation examined the Liverpool Catholic approach to politics from Catholic Emancipation to the first Home Rule Bill.

Dr Geoff Gill is Reader in Medicine and Tropical Medicine at the University of Liverpool. He also has history qualifications, and his research interests include the social and political effects of cholera and other infectious diseases in Victorian Britain.

Dr Andrew Gritt is Lecturer in History at the University of Central Lancashire and Director of the Institute of Local and Family History. His research is focused on rural south-west Lancashire in the period 1650–1850, and he has previously published in Economic History Review and Agricultural History Review. He is currently researching the role of apprenticeship in Lancashire's economic development in the eighteenth century and a separate study of the landlord-tenant relationship and economic development on the estate of the Blundells of Little Crosby in the later seventeenth century.

Alasdair Munro taught geography in Liverpool for many years prior to his retirement. He has undertaken a number of pieces of research into local history on Merseyside.

Catherine Nunn has for a number of years been actively involved in Cheshire local history. She is also a contributor to the forthcoming New dictionary of national biography. Her article derives from her thesis for the degree of M.Phil. awarded by the University of Manchester in 1998.

Lilian Potter lives on Wirral. She was educated in Liverpool and graduated from Lancaster University. Subsequently she received her M.Des. and her doctorate from Liverpool University School of Architecture. The material in her article derives from research into the history of social housing.

Duncan Sim is Senior Lecturer in the Department of Applied Social Science at the University of Stirling. He has undertaken research into minorities in the U.K., including English people in Scotland, as well as Scots on Merseyside.
