

NOTES ON CONTRIBUTORS

John Davies was until his retirement a principal lecturer in history at Liverpool Hope University College (now Liverpool Hope University). One of his major research interests is the Catholic community in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries.

David Dutton is Professor of Modern History at the University of Liverpool. He has written widely on the Conservative and Liberal parties in the twentieth century and is currently completing a study of the Liberal National party – Liberals in Schism – to be published by I.B. Tauris.

Michael Freeman is priest-in-charge of two parishes in the Anglican diocese of Liverpool. He has a long-standing interest in the Church of England in the seventeenth century and hopes to follow up his study of bishops by looking in more detail at some of the conforming clergy, who are often less well-known than their dissenting counterparts.

Michael Stammers is Keeper Emeritus at Merseyside Maritime Museum and a Friend of St Helen's church, Sefton.

Pat Starkey teaches in the School of History at the University of Liverpool. Her principal research interests are in the history of voluntary social work agencies working with families and women's history. Her most recent publications include 'Women religious and religious women. Faith and institutional religion in the lives of women' in D. Simonton, ed., The Routledge history of European women from 1700 (London, 2005), 'Saints, virgins and family members: exemplary biographies? Josephine Butler as biographer' in J. Dagers and D. Neal, eds, Sex, gender and religion: Josephine Butler revisited (New York, 2006) and 'Re-telling the stories of clients of voluntary social work agencies in Britain after 1945' in A. Borsay and P. Shapely, eds, Refiguring the recipient: Historical perspectives on the negotiation of medicine, charity and mutual aid (forthcoming, Basingstoke, 2007).

C. J. Watson graduated in German from Leeds University and took a PGCE at King's College, London. He has taught modern languages in Hyde, Easingwold, Chorley and Bolton. His interest in local history is more recent and, having completed a Certificate in Local History at Lancaster University, he is now engaged in postgraduate study there. His interests are in south-west Lancashire and East Yorkshire in the early modern period.
