

NOTES ON THE CONTRIBUTORS

John Belchem is Reader in History at the University of Liverpool.

Lucy E. Bosworth is a research student in the Department of Ecclesiastical History, New College, University of Edinburgh. Her current interests lie in the field of late medieval heresy.

Joy Campbell is Research Assistant on the Duncan Letters Project at the Department of Geography, University of Liverpool. She has completed a study of the Liverpool Dispensary 1778-1850.

Christopher Hamlin teaches at the University of Notre Dame, South Bend, Indiana.

Richard A. Hawes took his doctorate at the University of Liverpool and is a schoolteacher in St Helens and part-time lecturer in Liverpool's Department of Continuing Education.

Sandra Irish is Map Librarian and Departmental Officer in the Department of Geography at Lancaster University. She was formerly Research Assistant on an ESRC project investigating the development of corporation housing in Liverpool.

Gerry Kearns is Associate Professor of Geography at the University of Wisconsin-Madison. He is researching the demography and ideology of urban public health in Western cities.

Paul Laxton is Lecturer in Geography at the University of Liverpool. He has researched extensively into eighteenth- and nineteenth-century British urban history.

Colin G. Pooley is Senior Lecturer in Geography at Lancaster University. He has published widely on health, housing, migration, and the segregation of immigrant groups in nineteenth- and twentieth-century towns.

Damian X. Powell is tutor in history and tutor in archaeology at Whitley College, the University of Melbourne. He is preparing a study of the early modern judiciary and the evolution of legal process.

Sally Sheard is Research Associate in the Department of Public Health at the University of Liverpool. Her research interests are in public health, municipal politics and finance, and the development of urban infrastructure in the nineteenth century.