

NOTES ON CONTRIBUTORS

Dr Nigel Hall is a research fellow with the Faculty of Modern History, Oxford University. He has published several articles on the history of Liverpool's cotton trade. His research interests include the commercial history of Liverpool and the development of the London publishing industry.

Dr Philip Woodworth works for the Natural Environment Research Council and is based at the Proudman Oceanographic Laboratory, Bidston Observatory, which is one of the world's leading centres of research in coastal oceanography. His particular research interests include ocean tides and currents, and long-term changes in coastal sea levels due to land movements and climate change.

Jan Wood graduated from the University of Sydney, New South Wales with a B.A. (Hons) degree in history, followed by a Master of Archives and Records Management at the University of Liverpool. She has been working as an archivist at Devon Record Office, Exeter, since February 2000.

Sheryllynne Haggerty received her PhD in 2002 from the University of Liverpool, and has published articles on the mercantile communities of Atlantic port cities. She is now Leverhulme Research Fellow at Brunel University, studying the social and business networks of 18th century Kingston, Jamaica.

Dongho Chun was awarded a PhD in 2000 from the University of Manchester with a thesis on the history of the collection of British painting at Tabley House, Cheshire. He is currently a Research Associate in the School of Art History and Archaeology, University of Manchester.

Philip Higson, PhD (Liverpool), Lecturer at Chester (1972–90), is now President of the Baudelaire Society. His current research interests are the poetry of Baudelaire and Rollinat, and the art of Limouse. An expanded version of his prize-winning Sonnets to my Goddess appeared recently, also a play about Baudeliare.

David Shotter taught at Lancaster University for 35 years until his retirement in 2001. He has written widely on aspects of the Roman conquest and occupation of north-west England, most notably in matters relating to Roman coin-loss in the region. In 2002, he was made an Emeritus Professor of Lancaster University.