

NOTES ON THE CONTRIBUTORS

Martin Auton was taught history at Woking Grammar school by L.C.B. Seaman. He is a graduate of Liverpool University; completing his B.A. in 1969 and his M. Phil. in 1984. He has been teaching history and politics in a Liverpool Comprehensive school for 16 years and is presently a Race Relations Coordinator.

Audrey Coney studied local history and practical archaeology at Liverpool University. She is currently involved, with others, in researching the landscape history of eight lowland Lancashire townships.

R. Norman Dore is a retired schoolmaster, who works part-time as a lecturer for the extra-mural departments of Liverpool and Manchester Universities. He has published extensively on the Civil War in Cheshire, and is just completing the second volume of his edition of the Letter Books of Sir William Brereton, for the Record Society of Lancashire and Cheshire.

Lionel K.J. Glassey is a lecturer in Modern History at the University of Glasgow. He has published Politics and the Appointment of Justices of the Peace (1979) and is currently engaged on a study of the Exclusion Crisis and on a new edition of Burnet's History of My Own Time.

E.M. Swearman is a deputy head teacher in a Southport primary school. She was educated in Newcastle upon Tyne and has worked in the civil service and in commerce. After spending some time in Montreal, she has settled in Liverpool with her family.

Rick Turner is Cheshire's County Archaeologist. Having studied archaeology at Christ's College, Cambridge, he became a research assistant at Lancaster University and later an archaeologist with British Gas. Best known for his discovery of Lindow Man, his interest in architecture was fostered by an involvement with the relisting survey of Cheshire.

John Williams was born in Liverpool and educated in Widnes. He has been a member of the Widnes Historical Society for many years and is head of the English Department at Henbury High School, Macclesfield.
