

NOTES ON CONTRIBUTORS

Roger Dickinson is a Research Fellow in the School of History at the University of Liverpool. His research interests cover Lancashire, Cheshire, the Isle of Man and the Irish Sea region in the early modern period. He is currently working on volume four of the New History of the Isle of Man.

John Davies was until retirement Principal Lecturer in History at Liverpool Hope University, where he is currently a research fellow.

G. H. H. Glasgow was until retirement HM Coroner for the Metropolitan Districts of Sefton, Knowsley and St Helens, as well as being the senior partner in a Southport firm of solicitors.

John Virgoe is a retired Chartered Geologist who spends some of his leisure time undertaking historical research. His current research interests are the role of the gentry in agricultural improvement in eighteenth-century south west Lancashire and a biography of Thomas Eccleston.

Stephen Matthews is a retired Civil Servant with interests in aspects of the history of Cheshire, and Anglo-Saxon history, particularly travel. His articles range from King Offa, through the Norman Conquest to the agricultural epidemics of the 1860s. He is Editor of Cheshire History.

Malcolm Gratton has written and lectured extensively on the seventeenth century. His main research interest is the Civil War period. He was awarded his PhD by the University of Manchester in 1998 for his dissertation 'The Parliamentary and Royalist war effort in Lancashire, 1642–1651'.

